Complete with one word only in each space.

A DISCONTENTED PARENT

For three years, on and [1)] the teachers in Britain had been on strike or going slow. One parent, [2)] daughter received at the end of the summer a computer print-out telling her she had failed her school-leaving examinations (known in England [3)] O-level), expressed the anger of many:

"... when someone I love, who has worked hard and intelligently, is reduced [4)] tears by a computer print-out I start to look for reasons. I start to reflect on her [5)] throughout the year to share textbooks with a friend. I reflect on the number of classes she attended which the relevant teacher, in pursuit of a dispute, [6)] not... I reflect on the teacher who did not and does not set homework [7)] he 'doesn't believe in it.' Perhaps most of all, I reflect on [8)] might have been, [9)] not my daughter spent a crucial year in her life [10)] treated like an educational football by a profession so cosseted that faced with the threat of being assessed it walked [11)] the job.

"My wife and I cannot be the [12)] parents in this country who do not give a damn what teachers believe in. What we believe in is the right of our children to an education uninterrupted by disputes and untrammelled by pseudo-philosophical stances [13)] homework which are at best irrelevant and at worst plain idle. It may be that the anger and resentment I feel now is no substitute [14)] calm, rational thought followed by constructive action. But the first member of the National Union of Teachers who thinks of throwing that one at me had [15)] rehearse it first. In front of a mirror."
