Going the wrong way

They are banned in the European Union, and the U.S. state of California is phasing them out. But their numbers are increasing as intensive livestock farms begin operations all over the ___1___ world.

“Instead of going the right way, they are doing what is being ___2___ banned in other parts of the world,” says Tozie Zokufa, South Africa ___3___ for the animal welfare group Compassion in World Farming.

Although animal welfare groups are more ___4___ in Europe and the United States, “As the ___5___ of products of animal origin is increasing in Brazil or Thailand or Indonesia, just to name a few, people are ___6___ becoming more aware of how the food is produced,” says livestock expert Daniela Battaglia with the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization.

“They are ___7___ asking for more values to be respected,” she says, including a higher ___8___ of the environment and workers’ rights, as well as animal welfare.

Like the cry of a child

Zokufa used to be a ___9___ employed meat inspector in South Africa. One day while inspecting a slaughterhouse, he saw that a pig was not stunned ___10___ before it was killed.

“And the cry. The cry of that pig. It was like a the ___11___ of a little kid, a little girl,” he says.

Zokufa says that the ___12___ experience made him stop and think. He saw animals being treated much better at slaughterhouses exporting meat to Europe and decided he wanted to change the way meat was produced for South Africa.

“I knew that I couldn’t do it in the position that I had at the time because I was just flowing with the system,” he says.

So he joined Compassion in World Farming, which opposes large-scale, ___13___ livestock operations.
