

December, 10th

Gina gets up from her bed unwilling to go to class. Why? Because Christmas has arrived. Streets full of Christmas decorations, announcements of toys or different products which can't be missed in Christmas meals. Furthermore, the night before, her roommates told her at dinner all about everything they had bought to give to their families or about the outfits that they would wear at their Christmas dinners. She hates all this.

Finally, Gina decides to go to class. She has to run to not be late to class, but that's just too bad! She slips with on a sheet of ice, hitting hard and fainting for a few seconds in the cold ground of Granada. Damned Christmas! She wakes up in a world where Christmas doesn't exist! The families are together the most of the time, people don't stop laughing with their friends, a world where peace is the slogan. In short, a place where unforgettable moments are continuous.

-Gina, Gina, Gina! Are you okay? her classmate shouts at her.

When Gina wakes up, she finds a note in her pocket.

Live Christmas as if you are living here.
Don't worry about appearance, money or parties. Be yourself!
